NAME & ADDRESS DISCLOSURE

The FCC now requires us to give your billing name and address to "interstate service providers". Interstate service providers are usually long distance companies, but they also include pay phone owners, long distance resellers and 900-number providers. The FCC restricts the use of your name and address to the limited purpose of billing & collection, customer service, order entry, fraud protection, and transient customer identification. This means that interstate service providers may bill you directly when you use your calling card or accept collect or third-party charges. Please note that this does not affect telemarketing only the billing of the services listed above. If you do not want this information released you will not be able to receive collect calls or place third-party charges.

I request that my local telephone company withhold releasing my name and address to interstate service providers.
